

Word Bank:

species

patches

beak

helmet

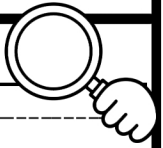

There are many different species, or types, of penguins in the world. Each species looks a little different and lives in a different place. The Emperor penguin is the tallest and heaviest penguin species, and it can survive the coldest Antarctic winters. The King penguin is almost as big and has bright orange-yellow patches near its ears and neck. The Gentoo penguin has a bright orange-red beak and a white stripe across the top of its head. The Adelie penguin is small, with a white ring around each eye. The Chinstrap penguin is named for the thin black line under its chin, which looks like a helmet strap. The Little penguin, sometimes called the fairy penguin, is the smallest penguin species of all.

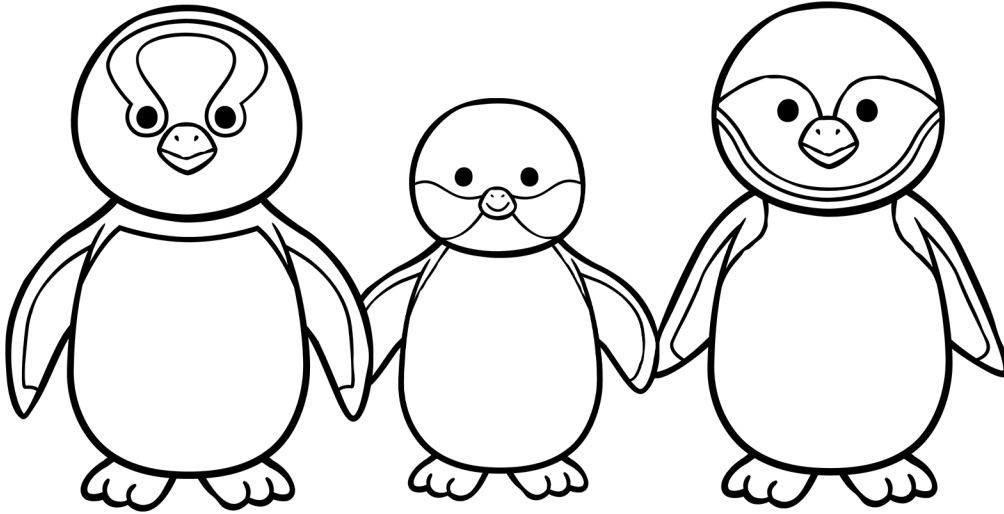

1. What does the word "species" mean?

2. Which penguin species is the tallest and heaviest?

3. How can you tell a Chinstrap penguin apart from other species?

4. Which penguin species is the smallest?

Word Bank:

species

patches

beak

helmet

There are many different species, or types, of penguins in the world. Each species looks a little different and lives in a different place. The Emperor penguin is the tallest and heaviest penguin species, and it can survive the coldest Antarctic winters. The King penguin is almost as big and has bright orange-yellow patches near its ears and neck. The Gentoo penguin has a bright orange-red beak and a white stripe across the top of its head. The Adelie penguin is small, with a white ring around each eye. The Chinstrap penguin is named for the thin black line under its chin, which looks like a helmet strap. The Little penguin, sometimes called the fairy penguin, is the smallest penguin species of all.

1. What does the word "species" mean?

A species is a type or kind of penguin.

2. Which penguin species is the tallest and heaviest?

The Emperor penguin.

3. How can you tell a Chinstrap penguin apart from other species?

It has a thin black line under its chin that looks like a helmet strap.

4. Which penguin species is the smallest?

The Little penguin.

